Abstract

In every field, the new millennium brought with it new opportunities and problems. Because of globalization, liberalism, and scientific documentation, the situation has changed. English evolved into the Lingua Franca of the world when new ideas and ways of thinking spread throughout the environment. At the same time, certain topics that had previously held prominent positions lost those positions.

Introduction

Every area faced new obstacles and opportunities in the new millennium due to advancements in science, globalization, and liberalization. New ideas and ways of thinking spread throughout the surroundings. The "lingua franca" of the globe is now English. At the same time, certain topics that had previously held prominent positions lost those positions.

In addition to offering us aesthetic enjoyment, English literature has also served as a weapon for altering the social, political, and economic structures. The pen revolution gave rise to all significant movements and revolutions. The social philosophers and laureates have been instrumental in altering peoples' perceptions and bringing about tangible change.

Many vocational and technical courses that offer a bright future are available to us nowadays. Every student and parent wants nothing more than to see their child enrolled in courses that will benefit them, such as B.Tech, M.Tech, MBA, PGDCA, etc. Nowadays, with the internet, electronic media, and new electrical devices, individuals are spending less time reading for pleasure.

Does English literature have any relevance in the modern era? This presents a clear dilemma in terms of the expression medium. The majority of the material in almost all Vocational and Technical courses is taught in English. Despite its widespread use as a language of communication, English literature is no longer at the same beautiful place as it once was.

English as a language and English as a literary form are clearly different. English has a technical global standing as a communication medium. The majority of the study materials for almost all occupational courses are in English. English has facilitated many political, economic, and social connections and closed the communication gap in the global community.

The most recent and cutting-edge scientific advancements and breakthroughs in science and technology are the result of research conducted in American colleges, where scientific discourse is conducted in English. English is the language of modern business management worldwide, and many Indian business managers have achieved success thanks to their fluency in the language. English is becoming more and more necessary for communication and trade between states in addition to being a medium for internal trade. In addition to Hindi, English has also been declared an official language by Parliament.

The English language has evolved into a global tool for thought and idea exchange. It serves as a tool for comprehending the ethnicity and culture of various nations. It has promoted travel all around the world, and India is profiting from the travel industry as well. In professional courses where English is used as a language but literature is not covered, the question is: What relevance does English literature have today?

According to statistics, students' interest in literature is clearly declining, and the subject is no longer in its former, illustrious position. All forms of literature have served as a source of knowledge and amusement for years. In addition to being aesthetically pleasing, it served as a tool for igniting and spreading revolution. Through the pen revolution, social thinkers and authors have been instrumental in altering peoples' psyche and bringing about a tangible change. Reading and studying literature enables individuals to form fresh perspectives and ethical stances. It enables us to understand the prevailing philosophical tendencies and concepts in a given culture at a certain period.

Literature is an artistic medium that can evoke a range of feelings, viewpoints, and a general sense of spiritual well-being. It is feasible to comprehend how modern western culture came to be by reading about the history that are portrayed in literature. It aids in our better understanding of the past and teaches us valuable life lessons.

Nowadays, with the internet, electronic media, and other technological improvements, people are spending less time reading books for enjoyment, such as novels, poems, and essays. Literature in its many forms not only brings people comfort and enjoyment, but it also raises consciousness.

People learn more about the world and its events as they expand their vocabulary and level of understanding through studying English. It is the universal language that people speak and use. Since most inventions and discoveries are discussed mostly in English, it is easier for people to understand the new ideas and perspectives that people are expressing. English is widely accepted and people are aware of its usefulness. Given that English is spoken in practically every nation on earth, it serves as the primary language of communication amongst people worldwide. Even though there are many regional languages spoken in India, each with its own distinct tone and characteristics, English is still widely used as a conversational language there.

The English language is spoken with various accents throughout the world. Approximately 400 million people speak it worldwide.

It offers a common platform for communication in the world of the Internet. English is used to communicate experiences, concepts, and thoughts in order to convey emotions over the world. It is used in business to carry out procedures and transactions in international markets. Even nations that require their citizens to speak in their mother tongue, like China, use it professionally. The commonwealth nations have used English as a literary language to convey their ideas and opinions. English-language works of literature from Australia, Afro-America, Indo-Anglia, Canada, and the United States are available. The most notable attribute of these nations' literature is how distinctively it incorporates, in both active and passive forms, the elements of their national experiences into the English language. The English language served as a medium for the global dissemination of revolutionary ideas and motivations that created social difficulties. Great social and political intellectuals from India's past, such as Sarojinidu, Rabindranath Tagore, and Raja Ram Mohan Roy, articulated their ideas for national reforms and patriotism in English. They were well-known academics, poets, and social philosophers whose English-language literary works had a profound psychological impact on the Indian populace. The English language aided them in learning the concepts and ideas of foreign social theorists such as Hobbs, John Locke, and Rousseau. Every nation's liberation warriors were impacted by works of art such as Social Contract. Since Mahatma Gandhi wrote his well-known book My Experiments with Truth in English at the time, the English language evolved become a tool for better understanding the circumstances. It is possible to identify Indo-Aglian literature as a vehicle for disseminating information about modern social, political, and economic life throughout the world.

Computers are quite useful in today's world. In the world of computers, new discoveries and innovations are made on a daily basis. Computer language, which is binary, is translated into English. Although there are other languages used in computers besides English, English is unquestionably the language that is utilized the most. In English, the governments of many countries discuss and analyze diplomatic matters. Since the majority of scientific literature is available in English, English is used in all technological domains, including aviation, telecommunication, and navigation. English is the primary language utilized in the tourism sector, hence the tourism department uses it to promote travel. The language used by all international corporations is English. These businesses favor hiring English language-proficient staff members.

Effective people have a bright future and plenty of good jobs available to them; English becomes an added advantage.

Conclusion

Since English is widely spoken and understood by most people worldwide, a significant portion of the global population uses it for international communication. English has become a widely recognized language in the modern world. English is used in skill development programs, personality development programs, national and international business, foreign affairs, industries, and tourism. As a result, English has spread around the globe as a language of digital technology.

Why are students choosing to take courses and subjects other than English literature, I wonder? The underdog's altered interests and way of life hold the key to the solution. It is necessary to make efforts to raise public awareness of the value of literature. It is necessary to conduct a reasonable amount of conferences, workshops, seminars, and theater workshops that emphasize the traditional, spiritual, ethical, and psychological aspects of literature in order to increase students' interest in it and help them understand its importance.
